A graphical and tabular summary of U.S. exports to major Asian countries is prepared from United States export and United Nations trade data. U.S. exports of 55 horticultural commodities are ranked by average value over the 1993 to 1995 period to 22 major Asian countries, to four Asian regions, and to the world. Japan is the leading Asian market for U.S. horticultural exports. From United Nations import data, the change in U.S. market share is analyzed and the top 7 suppliers are identified by Asian country for 23 horticultural commodity categories over the 1985 to 1994 period.

Overview of U.S. Horticultural Exports to Asia

by

Boyd M. Buxton and Darina Batkova[2]

Introduction

In 1989, the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) Council was formed as an informal group comprising 12 Asia-Pacific countries, including the United States. By November 1994, the group had grown to 18 and included the major countries in the region. A major objective of APEC is to achieve free and open trade and investment in developed markets in the Asian-Pacific region by 2010 and in developing markets by 2020. If APEC is successful, Asia should become an increasingly important market for U.S. horticultural commodities and products.

Two data sources are used in developing this overview of U.S. horticultural exports to Asian countries. The first is from U.S. trade statistics as summarized and reported by the Economic Research Service in the series "Foreign Agricultural Trade of the United States" (FATUS). FATUS aggregates specified harmonized codes for horticultural exports into a predetermined set of categories (see appendix A). The second data source is reported by the United Nations and presents total imports into specific Asian countries by origin. The U.S. market share in selected Asian countries can be analyzed for the U.N.-designated categories (See appendix B). However, U.N. data aggregates horticultural trade into categories that, in most cases, do not coincide with the categories reported in FATUS, making it impossible to determine changes in U.S. market share for FATUS categories.

The paper presents a graphical and tabular summary of U.S. exports by major Asian country and by commodity. It is divided into three sections. The first presents an aggregate overview of the relative importance of horticultural exports to U.S. agriculture and the importance of Asian markets for total U.S. horticultural exports. The second section presents U.S. exports of horticultural commodities/products to most of the Asian markets ranked by average annual export value from 1993 to 1995. The third section examines imports in major Asian markets from all sources and the trend in U.S. market share from 1985 to 1994 for the fruit and vegetable categories reported in the U.N. data set. The other major suppliers offering potential competition for U.S. exports in the major Asian markets are identified.

The world horticultural trade rose sharply over the last decade, pushed by a growing world population, higher consumer incomes, advances in transportation technology, and reductions in trade barriers. The United States participated in this expansion, with exports of horticultural commodities increasing from $1.6 billion in 1976 to $8.5 billion in 1995. In 1995, U.S. horticultural exports accounted for 15 percent of the total value of U.S. agricultural exports, up from only 7 percent in 1976.

Fresh fruit is the leading U.S. horticultural export to Asia - In 1994/95, fresh fruit was the largest category of U.S. horticultural exports to Asia, followed by nuts and preparations, frozen vegetables, and fresh vegetables. Asia accounts for a relatively larger share of U.S. fresh fruit, frozen vegetables, canned vegetables, and canned fruit exports and a smaller share for fresh vegetables, nuts and preparations, and other export categories.

Japan is the leading U.S. market in Asia - Japan is by far the leading destination for U.S. horticultural exports, accounting for almost $1.46 billion (57 percent) of all U.S. horticultural exports to Asian countries in 1994/95. Hong Kong, Taiwan, Republic of Korea, and Singapore rounded out the top 5 destinations that year. In 1994/95, these 5 countries accounted for 88 percent of the value of U.S. horticultural exports to Asia. U.S. export data reported no horticultural exports to North Korea, Mongolia, Macau, Burma, or Afghanistan in 1994/95. The U.N. data does report U.S. exports to Macau.

Oranges, apples, and frozen potatoes were the top 3 U.S. horticultural exports to Asia for the 1994/95 marketing season, each accounting for more than $200 million in value. The export value exceeded $100 million for almonds, fresh grapefruit, canned vegetables, fresh cherries, and lemons and limes. In total, Asia accounted for more than 37 percent of all U.S. horticultural exports. Among the top 20 commodities or commodity categories reported, Asia's share of the total U.S. export value varied from 17 percent for orange juice to more than 85 percent for fresh lemons and cherries.

Japan was the leading destination for most of the horticultural commodity categories. The single top destination for most commodity categories often accounted for a very large share of total U.S. exports to Asia. In 1994/95, Taiwan was the leading destination for fresh apples, plums, peaches, and pears, while Hong Kong was the leading destination for U.S. fresh grapes, lettuce, celery, potatoes, cabbage, and pistachio nuts. Australia was the leading destination for fresh garlic and filbert nuts.

U.S. horticultural exports to individual Asian countries

The figures and tables from pages 8 to 61 present U.S. horticultural exports as aggregated in the FATUS data base, ranked by average value for 1993 to 1995, to the world, the regional totals including South Asia, Southeast Asia, East Asia, Oceania, and for selected Asian countries. Individual commodities are ranked according to their relative export value for each of the areas considered. All values are in nominal U.S. dollars.

U.S. market share and other leading suppliers

Total imports into major Asian countries were ranked according to value in 1994 within the fruit and vegetable categories as designated in the United Nations data base. For those commodities where the United States represented a substantial share of the total imports into a particular Asian country, the trend in market share from 1985 to 1994 and the top seven suppliers were identified. A summary of whether the trend increased, decreased, or has remained flat over the 1985 to 1994 period is presented in the table on page 62. Significance is based on the regression coefficient on trend being significantly different from zero at the 95-percent level of confidence. The specific results are presented on pages 63 to 204.

Results were mixed. The United States is gaining significant market share in Japan for fresh apples, fresh fruit not elsewhere specified (nes), fruit temporarily preserved, edible vegetables, fresh or dry not elsewhere specified, and other fresh vegetables. The U.S. market share in Japan is declining for fresh grapes, flour of fruit or vegetables, and fresh citrus including oranges, tangerines, lemons, grapefruit, etc. The U.S. market share has increased in Hong Kong, the second leading U.S. horticultural export market, for fresh apples, dried fruit, fruit or vegetable juice, other fresh vegetables, and vegetables simply preserved. Generally, the United States is losing market share for citrus ("oranges and tangerines" and "lemons and grapefruit") in most Asian markets. In South Korea, the United States is also losing market share for fresh fruit not elsewhere specified, fruit or vegetable juice, lemons, grapefruit, and other citrus.
