Biography of Stanley R. Johnson

Editor-in-Chief of Agricultural Economics, Vols. 12–23

Stanley Johnson received a Bachelor's degree from Western Illinois University, a Master's degree from Texas Technological College in Lubbock, and a Ph.D. from Texas A&M University, College Station. He has held previous positions at the Universities of Missouri, Connecticut, California-Berkeley, Georgia and California-Davis as well as at Purdue University.

Stanley Johnson is Vice Provost for University Extension and a Charles F. Curtiss Distinguished Professor of Economics at Iowa State University (ISU). As Vice Provost he has managed a major restructuring of Extension at ISU including the organisation of a state-wide association of elected County Extension Councils, new budgeting and financial planning for county offices, major increases in state, grant and contract user fee funding, more focused and scientifically based information and education services, and closer co-operation with the colleges in research and education programs. Prior to his appointment as Vice Provost, Stanley Johnson was the Director of the Center for Agricultural and Rural Development (CARD), an internationally recognised multi-disciplinary public policy research centre. Stanley Johnson has continued his research activities in environmental and agricultural policy, strategic behaviour and industry structure since being appointed Vice Provost.

Stanley Johnson is a Fellow of the American Agricultural Economics Association, Member of the Former Soviet Union Academy of Agricultural Sciences, the Russian Academy of Agricultural Science and the Ukraine Agricultural Academy of Science, Honorary Professor of the Center for Rural Development Research, Chinese Academy of Sciences, Foreign Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences and Honorary Professor of the Ukrainian State Agricultural University. He received the Wilton Park International Service Award and the International Honor Award, Office of International Cooperation and Development, United States Department of Agriculture.
