About the Editors and Contributors

Editors:

Henry W. Kinnucan is a Professor of Agricultural Economics at Auburn University. He has been a student of commodity promotion programs for 15 years. His publications on the topic have appeared in scholarly journals in the United States, the United Kingdom, Canada, Korea, and Australia. He is co-editor of the volume Commodity Advertising and Promotion published by Iowa State University Press. Educated at the University of Illinois (B.S.) and the University of Minnesota (M.S., Ph.D.), Kinnucan spent three years as a post-doctoral Research Associate at Cornell University prior to joining the Auburn faculty in 1983, where he teaches courses in price analysis and market theory and maintains an active research program in commodity promotion.

John E. Lenz is a Research Associate in the Department of Agricultural, Resource, and Managerial Economics at Cornell University. Since coming to Cornell in 1989, after completing his Ph.D. at Washington State University, John has been analyzing various aspects of dairy promotion in New York State and the United States. He is editor of the NICPRE QUARTERLY, a newsletter from the newly-formed National Institute for Commodity Promotion Research and Evaluation. John co-edited, with Walt Armbruster, the volume Commodity Promotion Policy in a Global Economy published by the Farm Foundation. John earned his B.S. and M.S. degrees in Agricultural Economics at the University of Wisconsin—Madison.

Cynda R. Clary is an Assistant Professor of Agricultural Economics and Agricultural Business at New Mexico State University. Her work focuses on advertising effectiveness issues and producer satisfaction with commodity checkoff programs. She received a B.S. in Agricultural Business Management from Cal Poly, SLO, a M.S. in Management from Purdue University and a Ph.D. in Economics from North Carolina State University. Clary joined the NMSU faculty in 1993, where she teaches courses in Agricultural Marketing and Market Plan Development.
